Messrs. Carl Hayden, C. W. Miller, W. A. Bolton, F. A. Hough, J. W. Woolf and C. M. Taylor, the committee selected to prepare the Tempe matter which is to go into the hands of the legislature, met in the office of W. A. Bolton Saturday. Views characteristic of the town were selected, which will be photographed and cuts made of them for the pamphlet. The various members of the committee were appointed to write up the industries, schools, and products and whatever might be of value to Tempe as advertising matter. The committee will meet again Friday at 4 o'clock.

Misses Sallie and Mabel Hayden and Helen Stewart expect to leave Monday for Iron Springs to spend the balance of the summer.

Mr. McFadden with two of his sons came in from their cattle ranges Saturday with a bunch of cattle which they have sold to Tempe parties.

Misses Bertha, Clara and Maude Wilson and Miss Una Hanna are to leave for the sea coast next Thursday.

There was another wordy runaway on Mill avenue Saturday. The horse hitched to Hayden's surrey started for home on a gallop, but was brought to a standstill by Earl Brown before any damage resulted.

Miss Lena Hartsfield will leave for Prescott next Friday.

The directors of the Tempe Canal company held a meeting Saturday to transact necessary business. Owing to shortage of water the "doubting" process will be commenced so that more water will be in each ditch at a time and can be handled to better advantage.

The directors of the Tempe Canal company held a meeting Saturday to transact necessary business. Owing to shortage of water the "doubting" process will be commenced so that more water will be in each ditch at a time and can be handled to better advantage.

A day or two ago an incident occurred which, beside being an object lesson in the dangers attending tramp life, also showed the benefits of belonging to a secret order. A tramp who said he was going to Blaine attempted to board the Maricopa train. He missed his hold as he attempted to swing under a freight car on the road, and fell beneath the car, almost on the rail. One of the boxes containing the car axle struck him on the hip and turned him a complete somersault, throwing him out of the way and bruising him quite badly. He imagined he was hurt worse than he was and Dr. Meier was summoned. The tramp was placed on a cot and hauled in Mr. Davis' drug to the Tempe house, where he was given good and comfortable quarters, all without charge, as he belonged to a prominent secret organization. While the persons attending him were out for a pitcher of ice water the man "took a sneak." He probably walked to Maricopa, where it is easier to beat trains out.

GOWNS AT A FLOWER FETE.

Lovely Examples of the Paris Couturier's Art.

The tradition that it always rains on the day of the Fete des Fleurs seems on its way to be destroyed. Both last year and this the weather was perfect, and the success of the fete this year was undoubtedly largely due to the sunny sky with which it was favored. It is a rule that the majority of those who take part in this Parisian event hardly contemplate with equanimity the wholesale destruction of muslin flowers and the drenching of their flower-decked carriages that has been the rule on so many occasions.

The flower battle is not a fashionable fete, in the sense that women of the smart French would take an active part in it, but it is an occasion when a certain class of Parisians, gowned in the latest examples of Paris fashions that can be furnished by Paris couturiers, and in flower-decked carriages, throw flowers and smiles at their admirers, who through the driveway of the Bois. The Bois itself is decked with flowers and banners, and there is music from military bands stationed at discreet intervals. Moreover, the proceeds of the fete go to swell a fund that provides rewards and pensions to the "victims of duty," such as firemen, policemen and others who have suffered in rescuing life or in performing their duty. So there is a popular side to the fete that appeals to the masses.

Some of the carriages were marvels of good taste and ingenuity. One brake was converted into a huge basket of pink and white roses, with a handle of roses and broad pink ribbon tied in a huge bow. In the midst of this sat a pretty girl in pink and white frock. The most extravagant exhibition was probably a victoria completely covered with orchids of different sorts. Even prettier than this was a carriage covered with field flowers. Several of the carriages had flower umbrellas, perhaps in memory of the rainy days of Paris seasons. One small cart, driven by a little girl, was smothered in bluffs, and another low cart showed nothing but daisies and yellow ribbons.

But the most marvelous exhibition of the day lay in the sartorial display. Such intricate combinations of satin-like laces and lace incrustations, and such charming painted gauzes! An example of the last was a white gauze painted with yellow flowers and made up with medallions of black lace. Another was a very pale pink muslin painted with large roses and decorated with incrustations of yellow lace.

Some of the light muslin dresses were trimmed with bits of old brocade. Skirts and boleros of embroidered muslin made up with sashes or waistcoats of Pompadour silks were numerous. A handsome gown was of an embroidered ecru batiste, trimmed with set-in flounces of a coarse yellow cloth embroidered in the same color. Tais was made up with some touches of light blue. Several of the new habit bodices appeared with lace skirts. These were of brocade or lace over a color, with, in certain instances, waistbands of plain colored satin or velvet.

Charming was a white muslin embroidered in feather pattern in ecru lining. The bolero of embroidery and yellow lace was laced with narrow blue velvet ribbon and there was a little fringe of velvet loops extending all about the bolero and the choker. The skirt was built of two embroidered flounces.

A striking gown had skirt of red muslin, self-embroidered, and habit bodice of ecru velvet lace over red silk. The bodice, which had rather long coat tails, was finished in front with a draped waistband of red silk, fastened with some large silver buttons. The front of the muslin had embroidered revers turning back on the sides of the bodice.

A gown of yellow gauze made up over pale blue and trimmed with laces of black velvet was pretty, if conventional. Still, it is several seasons since colored linings under transparent fabrics have been seen, and this return to the old fashion is welcomed.

Some of the most elaborate of the muslin gowns were both embroidered and trimmed with lace medallions. One easily described in detail, for the wearer was standing in her carriage when seen, was built of muslin in a pale but clear yellow. The bodice and the upper part of the skirt and a short, closed bolero were of a most elaborate and delicate trimming. This consisted of incrustations of yellow lace figures and medallions of mauve silk, embroidered lightly in silver and framed in lace. Around these were large yellow, mauve and purple chrysanthemums embroidered in silks. The bolero to match had light elbow sleeves. Below the elbows the muslin made a puff, and then a pleated cuff with lace point over the hand. Above the bolero the pleatings ran across to form a yoke and choker, with lace points falling over the top of the latter.

In many instances trimmed with feathers. Indeed the modist's promise us a great many feathers on midsummer millinery. Very attractive was a rather severe shape, rolling up on one side, of wheat colored straw, woven with figures of white straw, one of the season's novelties. On the side that turned up were a knot and half a dozen stiff loops of orange colored velvet, most of the loops turning down in the hair. The crown of the hat was trimmed with a scarf of velvet and a large black bird. Extremely smart was a low, round, exaggerated toque shape of white muslin, embroidered with yellow flowers and trimmed with two white ostrich plumes starting from a buckle of dull gold placed in front.

Some of the prettiest toques worn now set well back of the head, showing the irregular fringe that of a hatiers' design. A toque of this style may perhaps turn up with high trimming on one side and on the other side roll over, with an ostrich plume falling on the hair.

A pretty model of white alpaca, embroidered with black spots, shown by one of the dressmakers, is made up with long, slender points of black lace set in about the bottom of the skirt, these points varying in length. The lower part of the bodice is trimmed in the same way and slightly "bloused" over a sash of blue Liberty satin. The yoke and undersleeves are of a batiste in shirt pleats, and about the choker is a blue velvet cravat. The elbow upper sleeves have points of lace coming up from the bottom and turning down from the shoulders. All the lace points used on the gown are narrow—not more than two inches across at the widest part.

Both nets and laces of twice colored thread, very coarse, seem popular. One example of a net of this sort is sprinkled with small black dots, and is used to nice effect on a gown of rose colored linen. On the skirt the net, with a lace edge to match, covers a shaped piece that mounts in front in a zigzag pattern surrounded by a circle, the upper edge of the pattern being headed by an entrelacs of the same trimming, on which the black dots are very thick. The little bolero is covered by the dotted net and finished by the edge, which also trims triple collars.

Prince zu Loewenstein, president of the German Catholic Union, has undertaken a systematic campaign against dueling. He has drawn up a statement, to which he has obtained 118 signatures among his own friends and acquaintances. The prince declares that the number of signatures would already be incomparably larger if officers of the active army could publish their real views without imperilling their military position.

PARASITE CAUSES ALL HAIR TROUBLES.

Nine-tenths of the diseases of the scalp and hair are caused by parasitic germs. The importance of this discovery by Professor Unna of the Charité Hospital, Hamburg, Germany, cannot be overestimated. It explains why ordinary hair preparations, even of the most expensive character fail to cure dandruff, because they do not, and they cannot, kill the dandruff germs. The only hair preparation in the world that positively destroys the dandruff parasite that burrow up the scalp into scales called scurf or dandruff, is Newbro's Herpicide. In addition to its destroying the dandruff germs Herpicide is also a delightful hair dressing, making the hair glossy and soft as silk.
